CLOSE TO 175 STUDENTS SUSPENDED

SAP policy may have affected spring enrollment

BY JANEEN TOOLE AND TOWANDA TISDALE
STAFF WRITERS

One reason registration may not have taken as long this spring may be due to the number of suspensions. Benedict's Satisfactory Academic Progress (SAP) policy is starting to cut into the student population.

Benedict's enrollment last semester was 2850, according to official figures. Some administration officials indicated they were expecting this spring's enrollment to be about 2,800 students. Vice President of Institutional Effectiveness Gary Knight said, however, "We might get close, but I do not feel we will make that expected number because of the students we had suspended based on their performance."

There are two scales involved with the SAP policy: quantitative and qualitative. This means that the students must maintain a certain amount of credit hours based on their specific classification and G.P.A. This past semester, 173 students were suspended.

But there may be some hope for those affected students. They should not be entirely discouraged. Dr. Mohammad Nikravesh, chairman of the SAP committee, shed some light on the subject.

"Students are readmitted, and then they are placed on probation, which begins the work of the SAP committee," he said.

The SAP committee is made up of eight administrators of the college. Nikravesh, who is also the Assistant Dean of the School of Science, Technology, Engineering, and Mathematics, said that affected students have a right to appeal a suspension. Only nine out of 38 student appeals have been granted so far.

"We hope by enforcing this policy the students will return in the fall with the mindset to be academically successful and be more responsible," added Knight.

Benedict encourages students to pre-register, fill out financial documents and apply for FAFSA. "A key to a successful fall 2004 semester is to get every student to fill out the FAFSA forms before the month of April, pre-register, and sign all other financial documents and the outcome will be a smoother registration," said Knight.

QUESTION OF THE ISSUE:

Would Martin Luther King Jr. be disappointed or pleased with the progress of blacks today?

COMPILED BY KRISTEN ARCHIE

Would Martin Luther King Jr. be disappointed with the progression of African Americans today? This was the question reporter Kristen Archie posed to some students and staff members on campus on the annual celebration of Martin Luther King Jr. Day. Here are their replies:

"If this is progression, then we as African Americans have a long way to go." — Environmental

Activist David A. Dorch, keynote speaker at this year's annual Martin Luther King Jr. assembly celebration

"I think he would be disappointed because the young people have been distracted from the movement to provide equality for all people regardless of race, gender, and creed." — Darryl Izzard, director of the Benedict College Gospel Choir

"Yes, I would think he will be disappointed with some of the situations of the African Americans today." — Nicole Smith, junior, computer science major, of Columbia

"In his day you had some that were with him and some that were not. There are some people today who still believe in this dream and some who feel that things should stay the way they are. It is basically the same. Nothing has changed. I believe that Martin Luther King Jr. would be disappointed with how African Americans are not using the resources and researching for their future." — Tameka Sanford, junior, mass communication major, of Atlanta, Ga.

NEWS BRIEF

Benedict College School of Education achieves national accreditation

Columbia — As of this year, Benedict College's School of Education has received national accreditation.

School of Education faculty and staff, guided by Dr. Janeen Witty, Dean for the School of Education, have been working hard over the past three years specifically toward this achievement.

Benedict revamped its teacher education program to meet the rigorous standards of this institution, the State Education Department, and the National Council Accreditation of Teacher Education (NCATE).

"It is a major milestone for this program to earn national accreditation," said President David Swinton in a recent interview. "Our faculty and students worked extremely hard over the past few years to achieve this goal."

NCATE is responsible for professional accreditation of teacher education programs. Benedict's Teacher Education Program met those performance-oriented standards. NCATE has accredited over 560 institutions, which produce two-thirds of the nation's new teacher graduates each year.

"Our goal is to prepare students to leave our institution fully armed with the skills, knowledge, and disposition to succeed as effective teachers with all children," Witty said.

Memories of MLK Day at the Dome

“One voice, one agenda,” shouted keynote speaker Dr. Ezekeil Hampton at the fifth annual King Day at the Dome held recently. The South Carolina Chapter of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People coordinated the event.

Hampton, who is president of the Baptist Education and Missionary Convention of South Carolina, told the crowd which numbered over 2,000, “If there is no struggle, there is no fight!” He insisted that if African Americans join together, change would occur in their communities.

The national Martin Luther King, Jr. holiday was a day of celebration, work and commitments in cities, and towns across the country. The day’s slogan of this state event was “March and Rally for Dignity and Justice.”

The King Day at the Dome event was held on a cool Monday morning. Hundreds of marchers, supporters, and rally-goers began the day by filling the pews at Zion Baptist Church, located on Washington Street in downtown Columbia, before the march began.

People of all races and colors gathered there as Dr. Sheila Koger, a Columbia area evangelist, delivered a message of remembrance and hope on Dr. Martin Luther King Jr. and his dreams.

From the church, the marchers made their way to the State House.

“Don’t stop; don’t shop until the flag drops.” These words and other slogans were printed on dozens of bright yellow NAACP signs waved in the air by the marchers.

Event organizers say that there will be a continued economic boycott on the state, until the Confederate flag is removed off the State House grounds and put into a place that holds historical artifacts, like a museum.

“Tell the truth you dissed our youth,” read another sign distributed by NAACP organizers. Dr. John Jackson, the director of the NAACP National Education Department, told the crowd he saw on television how the government paid $50,000 to save a dog out in the sea, yet South Carolina only spends approximately $1,700 per child per year for an education.

“How much more is the dog than our kids?” he asked. He also commented on how some students from Stratford High School in Goose Creek near Charleston were recently searched by armed special police teams.

Five students from the school, who were at the rally, talked about the humility, hurt and betrayal they experienced when their high school was raided last November. Police came in with their guns drawn and dogs as students filled the hallway. The students said that blacks were targeted in this incident, which got national attention.

Since 2000, King Day at the Dome has been an annual event coordinated by the NAACP in efforts to bring the Confederate flag off the State House grounds. Finally in 2002, the Confederate flag, which flew atop the State House dome for decades, was removed from the dome, but then the State Legislature voted to put it on the front lawn of the State House, in closer display to the public, as a compromise.

Wesley Clark, presidential hopeful, joined in the celebration of King Day at Zion Baptist with his own message at the rally. Clark called the Confederate flag “a flag of the past.”

“South Carolina needs to come together under the American flag,” he said, “the flag of the future.” Speaking in King’s name, Clark said, “We are going to complete your work!”

“Take the flag of treason down, right now,” said the Rev. Al Sharpton, the only black democratic candidate running in the presidential race. “America is fighting the war on terrorism when some of the terrorism is being represented with the Confederate flag,” he said.

“Blacks have come too far to turn around now—Generations have died to get blacks where they are today,” he commented.

Sharpton also encouraged blacks to get out and vote. He said, “If our parents did not leave anything else, they left us the vote, which is not for sale.”

“Happy birthday Martin, happy birthday, Martin,” shouted Sharpton, as he thanked King for all of his achievements and the present day changes because of his dream. Speakers all morning long encouraged marchers to vote. The NAACP helped in that process by placing voter registration tables in front of the State House lawn.

Milton Brown of Spartanburg said he and a friend made the trip to support the NAACP and the events surrounding King Day. He said that he was impressed by the candidates who showed their support for bringing the flag down and by the King Day activities. Brown said that the presence of the candidates who were there would likely play a role in his choice when it comes time to vote.

Some other notable figures at the event included State Sen. Darrell Jackson and former presidential candidate Carol Mosely Braun, who came to show her support for the NAACP’s initiative to bring the flag down.

Keeping BC politically aware

S.C. Primary offers students opportunity to get involved in election process

BY KEIANA PAGE
STAFF WRITER

Politically speaking, the year 2004 is very important for many reasons.

First, it’s an election year, which could bring a new president to this country. On Tues., Feb. 3, South Carolina will hold a presidential primary for the Democratic Party.

This primary is the first in the South and one of the earliest in the country. With this major event in the public’s thoughts, many are left to wonder what’s going on and how they can get more politically involved while in college.

To get more information about the presidential primary, the Tiger News went to Joiquim Barnes, a director with the S.C. Democratic Party headquarters. According to Barnes, a primary election takes place so that voters in that state can select a nominee for a political party. The candidate who wins the most state primaries will represent his or her political party in the general presidential election.

At press time, the candidates in the South Carolina democratic primary are Wesley Clark, Howard Dean, John Edwards, John Kerry, Dennis Kucinich, Joe Lieberman, and Al Sharpton.

The democratic primary in South Carolina is very important because whoever wins here may become the party’s presidential nominee. The primary also allows new voters the opportunity to get involved in what might be their first primary.

The upcoming democratic presidential primary also offers opportunities for Benedict students to become more politically active.

The first step to getting politically active is by voting. There are several places to get registered to vote here in Columbia. These include the local board of voter registration and the Department of Motor Vehicles. The Richland County Board of Voter Registration is located at 2020 Hampton St.

Several civic organizations such as the NAACP also have voter registration stations. Several campus organizations have also sponsored voter registration drives.

There are other ways to get involved in politics as well, such as volunteering with the various political campaigns.

Although Benedict College is a nonpartisan school, students can become politically active on and off campus. The S.C. Democratic Party offers a volunteer program, which also provides students with service learning hours. If interested in volunteering with the Democratic Party, contact Joiquim Barnes at (803) 799-7798 and the Office of Service Learning.

There are also opportunities to volunteer and intern with various candidates. To become a part of Gen. Wesley Clark’s political campaign interested students can obtain more information about this internship position by contacting Tom McNutt at (803) 779-4479. To volunteer with the Rev. Al Sharpton, contact Trelvis Miller at (803) 347-2394. If interested in working with Howard Dean, call Becky Robbins at (803) 782-2772. For John Edwards, contact Carey Campbell at (803) 255-8556 for volunteer information. For those who would like to be a part of the John Kerry’s team, call James Dukes at (803) 799-0534. To volunteer with Dennis Kucinich, call Michael Berg at (803) 748-0456. To volunteer with Joe Lieberman, contact Barry Butler at (803) 252-0996.

These volunteer and intern opportunities not only give students the chance to meet influential people, but they also look great on resumes.

There was one recent opportunity for students to become politically involved with a major political action march, rally, and debate with all the candidates in the South Carolina Democratic Party primary.

On Fri., Jan. 30, The Center for Community Change, an organization based in Washington, D.C., hosted a public meeting and voter mobilization drive at the Adams Mark Hotel in downtown Columbia. This was followed by a march to the Township auditorium, where several of the candidates spoke and debated. The event allowed participants to meet and hear several of the democratic candidates. Nationally syndicated radio personality Tom Joyner was the scheduled moderator for the event.

If you missed this event, there will be more opportunities for you to get involved in the political process that makes America, America.

NEWS BRIEF

Famed civil rights activist Joseph Lowery leads town hall meeting at Benedict

Columbia — Longtime civil rights activist the Rev. Joseph Lowery, along with other notable community and public leaders, came to Benedict last month to take part in a Town Hall meeting entitled “The People Speak,” held in the Swinton Center.

“The People Speak” meeting was held to give South Carolina voters the opportunity to discuss and listen to civic and community leaders address political, social, and cultural issues, particularly those affecting minority communities. The Town Hall meeting helped set the stage for more debates and community forums leading into the South Carolina primary.

Lowery commented on the Iraqi invasion and America’s ongoing involvement in that war. According to President Bush, one of his major reasons for going to war with Iraq was the possible threat of attack by its leader Saddam Hussein and the unleashing of weapons of mass destruction from that country. No weapons of mass destruction have been found, however. Saddam has been toppled and is in the hands of U.S. authorities.

Lowery said that the real weapons of mass destruction were not in Iraq, “but are in America, in the form of 43 million people who are uninsured, millions of people unemployed, and jobs leaving our shores, displacing American workers. These are the real weapons of mass destruction.”

The audience sought advice from panelists on issues to watch in the upcoming elections. Social Security entitlements, health care costs, economic opportunity for small businesses, and the staggering costs of higher education, which force parents and students to seek out loans that have all but replaced need-based grants, were all major topics of interest.

Among the list of panelists were members from health and development groups such as Dr. Pamela Roshell, state president of the S.C. AARP; Lathran Woodard, executive director of S.C. Primary Health Care Association; Dr. David Swinton, and other HBCU presidents such as Dr. Henry Tisdell of Claflin University and Dr. Lee Monroe of Voorhees College; and public officials such as Councilwoman Peggy Butler and Mayor Christopher Campbell, president of the S.C. Conference of Black Mayors.

The Talented Mister Hunt

BC staff member takes back the stage in award-winning drama

By ALI OMAR
EDITOR

Benedict staff member Gerald Hunt is finally stepping into the spotlight again by starring in the Workshop Theatre's production of Fences. Though this is Hunt's Capitol City acting debut, he is no stranger to the stage.

Prior to coming to Columbia, Hunt was a theatre major at South Carolina State University, where he earned a degree in professional theatre. There, he was a force to be reckoned with in terms of his powerful acting.

Before he graduated, he would have the leading role in a number of productions including Bubblin' Brown Sugar, Trojan Women, Othello, Dream Girls, and Medea.

Hunt, a native of Myrtle Beach, continued to perform, but soon he would take a hiatus from the acting stage for other important roles in the theatre. After leaving South Carolina State, he became an assistant electrician at the Crossroads Theatre in New Brunswick, N.J., which won several Tony Awards for some of their productions. He was affiliated with the company from 1992 to 1999. He also worked at Norfolk State College in Virginia, where he served as the school's technical director from 1993 to 1994.

As fate would have it, Hunt found himself back in South Carolina. Happy to be able to blend his love for theater and the chance to work in an academic setting, Hunt accepted the position of manager of Benedict's Henry Ponder Theater.

Assuaging the demands of being the manager of a college performing theater, he knew that he would give just as much attention to detail and countless hours of hard work as he gave to working in front of the stage.

That he has done. Here at Benedict he not only oversees the operations of the theater, he also performs most of the technical duties there, as well as handling the technical needs for the productions put on by the Fine Arts Department.

Acting, however, has always remained a passion for him, he says.

When asked why he got back into acting after such a long break, Hunt simply replies, "It was time."

And what a way to get back into acting. Hunt will be playing the role of Troy Maxson, the lead character in Fences, the Pulitzer Prize winning drama.

Troy Maxson is a middle-aged black father who has to deal with the "fences" that have been built around him. Hunt will need to muster every ounce of acting talent he can to play such a demanding character. He is ready for it, though. His years of college acting and community theater involvement have prepared him for the task.

He should not have too much trouble coming into character since he had been involved with another enactment of the drama prior to Workshop's production. Hunt directed Benedict's production of Fences back in the Spring of 2002. In that production Education Department's Call Me Mister Program Director Edward Hill brilliantly acted the same Troy Maxson role.

Nevertheless, the difference between Benedict's production and Workshop's is "not having to do everything else that encompasses producing a play," says Hunt. "All I have to do is act."

The play's director, Elena Martinez-Vidal, is thrilled he has joined the cast. In a recent rehearsal she expressed confidence that Hunt will perform beautifully. "He's amazing," she commented.

Workshop's Fences begins the first performances Jan. 30. It will go through to Feb. 11. Performances start at 8 p.m. There will be one matinee performance on Feb. 8 at 3 p.m. The Workshop Theater is located on the corner of Bull and Gervais Streets. For tickets or more information, call the Workshop Theatre at 799-6551.

MARTIN LUTHER KING JR. HOLIDAY SPEAKER

After the national holiday to celebrate the legacy of Dr. Martin Luther King Jr., Benedict also paid homage to the famed civil rights leader with an assembly on Jan. 20 in the Swinton Center.

Environmental activist David A. Dorch of Williston was the guest speaker for the event. He shared with the audience the importance of being aware of how such factors as air pollution and radiation can affect the environment and black communities.

Junior Kourtney Humbert, one of the students who attended the program, said the speaker was very informative. "Since I attended the MLK program on environmental injustice, I am more cautious of my surroundings and more aware of the air I breathe," she said.

Singing, dancing, and other dramatic talents were displayed at this event. The highlight for this event was the moving performance of the award winning Benedict College gospel choir.

Campus Minister the Rev. Glenn Prince stated that the purpose for the event was to celebrate King's life and "to expose students to people who still engage in the fight for justice."

The event was sponsored by the Religious Services Department.

Popularity of team handball slowly on the rise

By RAYNITA MILLER
STAFF WRITER

While team handball as a sport has been offered here at Benedict since 1998, it is still not as popular as two of the biggest sports programs here — basketball and football. Yet, it has grown in popularity and is slowly gaining the attention of students.

Men's and women's team handball was first introduced as a club sport to Benedict in 1996 when the National Olympic Handball Team held a practice here. Two years later Athletic Director Willie Washington, who was then men's basketball head coach, worked to get team handball as a club sport here.

Womens' handballer #10, Felisha Burley, attacks the goal while her other teammates stand ready to assist offensively.

His efforts followed the formation of the South Eastern Team Handball Conference (SETHC) in 1998.

There were a total of nine division 1 teams in the SETHC in 1998.

Benedict is the only HBCU school to play team handball.

Benedict Men's and Women's Handball Coach James Rice played team handball at Benedict for two years from 1998-1999. Rice was recruited to play while playing basketball for Coach Washington (1993-1997). Now he finds himself recruiting possible players.

"I often walk around campus asking students if they would be interested in playing handball," he said. "I explain the basic rules to them and tell them that it's a relatively new sport and if they're interested, I am more than willing to teach them everything I know."

He said that many of the students he talks to are not interested in playing because they don't want to try something new. "So I try to interest other student athletes," said Rice.

Not only is he the men's and women's handball coach, Rice is also the men's basketball assistant coach and gym supervisor, which makes it easier for him to find players who already play a sport.

"It's easier for students who already play a sport to cross over and play handball because they are more physically fit and disciplined to play this sport, which requires a lot of running, being physically aggressive, and patient," he said. "I also go down to Atlanta, Ga. where handball is more popular and recruit high school students to persuade them to come play for Benedict once they graduate," said Rice.

This season the men's team is 1-2 and 1-0 in the conference, and the women's team is 1-5 and 1-3 in the conference.

Since its humble beginnings six years ago, the sport has gotten more attention from prospective players and spectators.

It takes 14 to 15 players per men's and women's handball team. As of this season they now have full team rosters.

Although team handball is only a club sport, there are plans in the works to try to get it sanctioned by the National Collegiate Athletic Association (NCAA).

"I believe that the SETHC is a 'feeding' team for the National Handball Team," said Rice. Since he has been coach, Benedict has sent six men's handball players to try out for the national team.

The National Handball Team, which chose several players out of the SETHC to try out for the national team, selected six players from BC's men's team to go to Lake Placid for the national team handball tryouts.

Last year Benedict's men's handball team won the SETHC conference tournament held in Atlanta, Ga., while the women's handball team took second place. With all of the accomplishments that have been made in the sport's short existence at Benedict, the coach and players have high expectations for the future progress and popularity of the sport.

Handball Facts

What is handball?

Handball is combination of basketball and soccer. Players attempt to score by throwing a small soccer ball from either the six or nine meter line into a goal, which is similar to a soccer goal.

Players are allowed to dribble the ball just like in basketball, but once a player picks up his/her dribble; he or she can take three steps in any direction. After a player takes three steps he/she must either pass the ball or try to score. The game consists of two 25 minute halves.

How Many Players?

There are six players on the court at a time, along with the goalie.

Playing Surface:

Handball can be played indoors or outdoors on a handball court or a basketball court.

BC's Handball Team Accomplishments:

1st Place in SETHC Conference Tournament (2003) - Men's Team

2nd Place in SETHC Conference Tournament (2003) - Women's Team

Six men's players invited to try-out for National Handball Team (2003).

Benedict is currently the only HBCU school with men's and women's handball teams.

MEN'S AND WOMEN'S BASKETBALL

Teams mixing academics with winning performances

By DELAQUA PICKETT
STAFF WRITER

The start of a new basketball season for the BC Tigers and Tigerettes has already begun and so far the season looks good.

Coach Maurice Bailey of the women's basketball team says his team is doing well. At press time the team's record was 5-2 in the conference and 7-5 overall.

Coach Bailey's focus is on the team winning their conference and then going to the national championship.

Meanwhile, the Tigerettes are not only showing their strength in athletics but also in academics. The team members have a 3.2 GPA overall.

"Give 110 percent, do the best you can, play hard and make good decisions," says Coach Bailey, describing what he tells the team.

Not only is the women's team doing well, but so is the men's team.

Catching up with the men's basketball team is not always easy, especially after they come off a long weekend on the road. They are 7-1 in the SIAC conference.

Men's Coach Fred Watson's goals are to win the conference, play in the tournament and go to the nationals.

Watson also believes that education is important. That's why he put together a well-supervised study hall for his players.

At the home games, Coach Watson pulls his players to the side and says, "Protect our house," and on away games he says, "Play well on the road, and play hard."

It looks as if both coaches are going to have a great season.
